Have you ever wondered what schools were like in the days of long ago? Many of these schools were held in the home of one of the women in the village. The women were the teachers. The children all gathered in one room, which was usually in the kitchen. The teacher kept the naughty ones from running away by tying them to her chair. Later, people built one-room schoolhouses. At one end of the room was a wide fireplace. The windows were made of oiled paper instead of glass. There were long benches made of logs in the room. There were not many schoolhouses with a second floor. Now many school buildings are fine buildings.
