Questions 13-14

Hi Kevin,

Thanks for your e-mail. Sorry I didn't reply sooner. But I was busy because last Wednesday was Tomb Sweeping Day, a day to pay respects to our ancestors. In the morning, my family went to visit my great grandparents' tombs. We cleaned and cut the long grass around the gravesites. Besides, we wiped the tombstones and decorated them with fresh flowers. Then we laid out offerings of food, fruit, cookies and paper money. After praying for my great grandparents, the paper money was burned for them. Then we went home for lunch.

On this day, people in Taiwan usually eat a kind of spring roll, which has many ingredients, including eggs, meat, vegetables, and so on. All the ingredients are wrapped up in rice paper. I especially like to put plenty of peanut powder and sugar in mine. It's yummy. You might want to try it when you come to visit me during summer vacation. Look forward to seeing you soon.

Sincerely yours,

Paul

Pigs are fascinating animals. Human beings began to domesticate pigs about 9,000 years ago. Meat is not the only thing that people take from pigs. Almost every part of the pig is made good use of. Pig bones and skin, for instance, are used to make glue and footballs. Painters' brushes come from pig hair. The animals' fat is used to produce insecticides, floor waxes, rubber, and plastics. You may also be surprised to know that nearly 40 different drugs make use of elements that come from pigs. Moreover, pigs' heart valves can be used to replace human ones.

Interestingly, a farmer in England holds pig races, which have been very successful, to raise money for charity. This proves that, while people love to eat pork, they also think pigs are loveable. Furthermore, the word "pig" has several uses in the English language. People say "pigs might fly" to mean something is impossible. When someone "pigs out," it means he or she eats lots of food.
